the same rights as the press under the First Amendment according to many court decisions over many years) to protection under the First Amendment.

THAT SAME amendment, which the Council of Churches is so willing to see eroded in the interests of better TV fare, also says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; . . ."

It's surprising that responsible churchmen would willingly see the rights under this amendment abridged for others, and this is precisely he effect the implementation of its recommendations would have.

Although there was nothing original in the Council's resolution the Council of Churches lution it did neatly encompass about every known or suspected nostrum, but by putting all the herbs in one strong position the Council is more likely to kill than cure the patient.

THE COUNCIL recommends that the Federal Communications Commission continue to hold public hearings to examine the performances of stations, intensify its pressure for more local programming, be given the power to regulate the networks, divorce advertisers from control of program content, adopt the commercial limits of the existing code, and control the integrity of advertising. Further, the Council declared, "Television and radio programs should not be judged solely, or even primarily, on the basis of audience size or cost per thousand viewers or listeners. Rather evaluation should be made on such criteria as integrity in reporting aesthetic standards, and value for a particular audience."

THE IMPLICATION is that the government should make the above judgments and establish the intangible standards suggested. On this aspect of the resolution the New York Times had this to say in an editorial generally chastising the Council for its approach: "The courts can settle matters of libel and slander, but questions of taste are too vague and disputable to be put into the hands of government controllers. Whatever they did would take the form of censorship whether it were called that or not."

It's to be surmised that the religious leaders are concerned about the effects television is having on the spiritual and moral fiber of our society, and therefore look to the government for corrective measures. Even slight familiarity with the great body of social research shows that the principal agents of character formation are the home, school, and church.

HOLLYWOOD — The National Council of Churches would be well advised to reread very carefully the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and to study its implications for both the churches and television. With what must have been careless abandon, the Council recently voted a resolution urging far-reaching governmental control over radio and television. The Council's right to criticize television, newspapers, or even soda pop manufacturers is not challenged, nor is its right—perhaps obligation—to seek improvement in all aspects of our society.

But this precipitous recommendation goes beyond seeking change within an existing legal framework—it challenges the right of the press (and broadcasting has been afforded

SUMMER DESSERTS OF fruits of the season make festive dining whether they are plain or fancy. This shortcake has a special zip and is served in special fashion.

Dress up Dining with Festive Peach Finale

Summer is in full bloom when peaches grace the market displays. Their beauty and aroma invite buying and serving. Peaches add eating enjoyment to any meal in the day for they team up with cereal for breakfast, other fruits for a luncheon salad and shortcake for desserts.

You'll find the Hales, Faye Elbertas and Rio Oso varieties particularly good for slicing. These are all freestone varieties and have the delicate sweet flavor you enjoy in dessert dishes.

For a special occasion or to dress up your family dinner at home, try this festive version of peach shortcake.

- PEACH SHORTCAKE
- 6 cups fresh peaches
 - 3 lbs. honey
 - 1/3 cup sugar
 - 1/4 cup peach brandy
 - 1 recipe biscuit shortcake
 - Soft butter
 - 1 cup whipping cream, whipped
- Combine sliced fresh peaches with honey, sugar and peach brandy. Chill while preparing shortcake. When shortcake is baked, split and spread with butter. Spoon peaches between biscuits with some of the whipped cream. Top with additional peaches and garnish with remaining whipped cream. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

- BISCUIT SHORTCAKE
- 2 cups biscuit mix
 - 1 lbs. sugar
 - 1 tsp. grated orange rind
 - 1/2 cup milk
 - 1/4 cup melted butter
- Combine biscuit mix with sugar and rind. Add milk all at once and beat with fork until dough is well blended. Add melted butter and blend in thoroughly. Drop

'Evap'-Egg Blends
Because of its smooth, blendable qualities, evaporated milk makes a superb custard base for puddings and other desserts, vegetable bakes and so on. Not to be overlooked is the fine texture evaporated milk gives to scrambled eggs and to omelets. An evaporated milk-egg blend for making French toast results in a superior golden crust; delicately light and tender texture.
